1. INTRODUCTION

Football is for everyone, and that has never been truer when it comes to the women's game and its growth and development, whether at grassroots level or right at the top of the international stage.

FIFA has 211 member associations and with this being a World Cup year, it is important to analyse the current status of the game around the world. This is why the FIFA Women's Football Member Associations Survey Report has been compiled. According to the survey, in 2019, 73% of member associations have an active senior women's national team, which is up from 55% in 2015. This indicates that 18% more teams in the FIFA/Coca-Cola World Ranking have played at least five fixtures over the last 18 months, compared with four years ago. The survey comes less than a year after FIFA published its first Women's Football Strategy in October 2018, which outlines how FIFA will work with its wide range of stakeholders. This includes confederations and FIFA-affiliated member associations, clubs and players, and of course the media and new and existing fans. In order to gain crucial insight into the state of play, FIFA conducted the baseline survey with the 211 member associations, of which 198 participated. This allows us to measure and evaluate the current global landscape of women's football, with the survey results helping to inform and tailor strategic implementation plans. The survey featured 50 questions, which cover a number of topics that are vital to the development and growth of the women's game

everything from players and national teams, clubs

and domestic competitions, to communications, within our member associations. This covers marketing and operational structure.

This report will serve as a benchmarking tool for FIFA and its stakeholders to help put their collaborative and strategic plans into action. To do this, the report has been divided into three sections:

- Global snapshot an overview of how the results feed into the five pillars of the FIFA Women's Football Strategy. These pillars represent the development and growth of the game, how it is being showcased, communicated and commercialised, governed and led, and how education and empowerment are being utilised.
- Confederations fact sheet a breakdown of the results relating to everything from the participation of players to the number of coaches and referees on a much wider, confederation scale.
- Member associations fact sheet – highlighting the current status quo of the 198 member associations that participated in the survey.

The significance of this survey report is further heightened thanks to ITMS (International Transfer Matching System) being utilised for the very first time in the women's game. The online platform was developed to provide transparency in football transfers to member associations, and has recorded that 996 transfers took place between 1 January 2018 and 1 May 2019.
